

CRUSADE AGAINST THE KISS

Modern Science Has Decried That It Is Dangerous and Should be Condemned.

Kissing in its modern promiscuity is pernicious and should be condemned as dangerous.

The custom probably had its origin not in affection, but in suspicion. In primitive times, when the sense of smell was perhaps more acute than that of sight, bringing the faces together was a means of identification and of distinguishing friend from foe. We have now other better developed senses, psychic and physical, which tell us of friendship, and kissing has become a mark of affection, rather than a test of it.

It is not against this that the hygienist—the sensible one—protests, but against the meaningless and dangerous habit of pecking at the lips of every one, especially of the defenseless infant. It is really an affront for a stranger, or even an ordinary friend, to kiss a baby on the lips, and the act should be resented.

Kissing among members of the family is hygienically permissible, fortunately. It is of course through the transmission of bacteria that kissing is harmful. But each family has its own domesticated bacteria, as it were, of the same species as those inhabiting other people, but somewhat modified by constant interchange. Against these each member of the family is in a measure immune. They are like an ill-natured pet dog that respects the members of the household with which it lives, and will not bite them, but snaps and snarls at strangers.

Kissing should, therefore, be a family greeting; for strangers or ordinary friends the handshake suffices. Above all, the baby's lips should be sacred.—Youth's Companion.

THREE PARTS OF ENGLAND

Region of Great Industries, Small Factories and Cathedral Towns Are Noted.

England, as every attentive observer has noted, falls roughly into three parts. North of a line drawn from the Dee to the Humber there is the England which is almost as new as America, the England of coal and iron, cotton and wool, the England of great mills and mines and of industry on the immense scale. That is the England, the capital of which is Manchester, Sheffield, Leeds and Bradford, the cities whose names stand throughout the world for modern English manufacturing supremacy and commercial enterprises, and this England has pronounced decisively for the government, for free trade and, above all, for democracy.

Just to the south of the line there is the Midlands, the region of which Birmingham is the capital, the region in which industry is carried on for the most part in small factories by struggling employers. That England has on the whole, gone against the government.

Finally, there is the south, the feudal England, the region characterized by cathedral cities, small market towns and rather decayed residential boroughs.

In size of population, in wealth, in industrial significance, and in virility the urban north as unquestionably outweighs the urban Midlands and the urban south as it has unquestionably given its verdict for the cause of progress.

Sense of Direction in Animals.

The remarkable faculty which cats, dogs, pigeons and other animals possess of returning in a straight line to a point of departure has awakened much curiosity on the part of naturalists. Some refer it to instinct, some to intelligence similar to man, some to an internal mechanism which makes the animal simply automata, but none of these attempted explanations does anything toward solving the mystery. One of our ablest modern scientific writers supposes that when an animal is carried to a great distance in a basket its flight makes it very attentive to the different odors which it encounters upon the way, and that the return of these odors, in inverse order, furnishes the needful guide.

Most Mysterious Disease.

Rabies is a most mysterious disease, so much so that doubtless there have been many deaths from so-called hidden rabies in country people, never even suspected as hydrophobia. Some more furious cases could easily be mistaken for acute violent insanity. Others look like acute general paralysis, always bringing death. There seems as yet no remedy for hydrophobia except to kill dogs mercifully and by wholesale. Hydrophobia is gradually and strongly taking a firm hold in this country and American character seems too shiftless and variable to keep up and drive the pest out by years of patient, persistent use of the muzzle, as was done in England.—New York Press.

Memory and Intellect.

The possession of a great memory does not necessarily mean a strong intellect. Mozart, when only 13 years old, played a new opera from one hearing, which had been composed especially to test his skill. But in addition to reproducing the opera from memory without missing a note, he introduced in the second playing the variations, which struck his cultured hearers dumb with amazement. Blind Tom could probably have reproduced the same opera. He did play Liszt's celebrated Hungarian opera after hearing it once without missing a note, but he could not have created what Mozart did. He had Mozart's memory, but not his intellect.

The Brute.

"Love," Mrs. Simpson, "I bought a necktie for you this morning at a bargain sale."
"Did you really?"
"Yes. And—boo! boo—you don't seem to appreciate my thoughtfulness a bit!"
"Oh, yes I do, but I'd appreciate the gift more if it were a cross-tie. We need kindling."

ODD OCCURRENCES.

A celebrated English naturalist relates a comical story of his first introduction to a turtle, some forty years ago. There was to be a grand public dinner at a seaside hotel, and the catering being entrusted to a noted cook and purveyor, in honor of the occasion he undertook to provide real turtle soup for the feast. Accordingly, a live turtle arrived at the hotel a few days before the date fixed for the banquet, and, of course, became the one theme of conversation and astonishment in the neighborhood. People for miles around flocked to see it, and if the turtle, as it lay on its back in a straw-carpeted shed, feebly moving its flippers to and fro, had been a griffin, it couldn't have attracted more attention. The turtle was not to be killed until the morning of the eventful day, but on the preceding afternoon some bright person suggested to the landlord that it was getting weak, and that it would be all the better and fresher, and reappear to greater advantage in tomorrow's tureen, if it had a sea bath. The idea was voted capital, a wheelbarrow was brought, the prospective soup hoisted upon it, with a long line fastened round its shell, and the procession forthwith started for the beach, with half the town in its wake. The barrow was wheeled into the sea and tilted until its burden was launched. Off the turtle paddled joyously, and the rope being paid out to utmost length. After a proper lapse of time, the rope was hauled in, but the loop was empty. The grateful turtle doubtless steered for the West Indies, and ox-tail soup graced the banquet. But it was not safe to mention "turtle soup" to the landlord for many a year.

A traveler recently stopped at a Georgia hotel, where the landlord had just bought a live wildcat, which was chained in the yard. The traveler had never seen such an animal before, and was rather nervous about its proximity. That night the landlord went through the house putting out the lights, and the traveler heard the rattling of the chains on the lamps as they were lowered to be extinguished. He thought it was the wildcat's chain, and, as the sound came nearer, he was convinced that the beast had escaped and was prowling through the house. The idea was terrifying. Remembering that his door was ajar, he sprang from the bed, made a dash for the window in his night clothes and jumped to the ground. The proprietor heard the noise, looked out, and seeing the guest making off, supposed he was "jumping his board" and chased him, the town marshal joining in the pursuit. The traveler fled in dire dismay for nearly a mile, when, hearing the footstep close behind, he attempted to climb a tree and was captured. Then mutual explanations followed, and the guest returned to finish his nap.

An odd hunting adventure recently befell a British officer in India. He was mounted on a fleet mule, and was running down a wild boar, intending to lance it, when the animal turned, bit the mule's leg, and then fled again. The mule screamed awfully, and in a minute she had deposited the officer on the ground; then, kicking out vigorously five or six times, as if to see that her legs were all right, she started after the unfortunate pig at lightning speed, with fury in her eyes and vengeance in the crook of her ears. The race was not long, and the wild boar soon realized that he had exasperated a relentless enemy. He was soon wounded, and the mule, coming up with him, caught him by the backbone with her teeth, crunched it and threw him to the ground, and then, before he could rise, kicked him so vigorously that he was a dead boar in less than no time. Then the mule returned to her master and gave utterance to a "hee-haw" of triumph.

SUNFLOWER PHILOSOPHY.

Everybody has a hoodoo these days

Whoever saw a man and wife who were both red headed?

The younger your daughter, the more apt she is to love you.

Every woman thinks the other woman's troubles could be cured by certain wall mottoes, if they would only read them.

A woman doesn't have much respect for her mother's opinions when she buys her wedding clothes, but she has a great deal when it comes to taking care of her first baby.

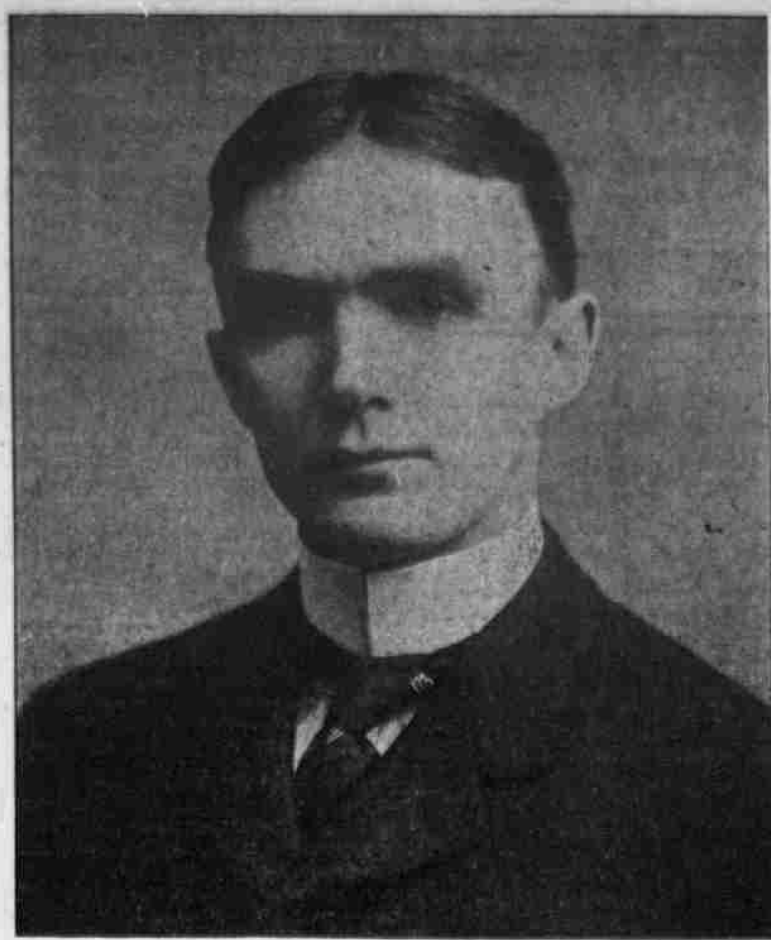

If a rich woman is also a man-hater, she gives most grudgingly in helping some widow with a lot of children, being of the opinion that such a woman is only getting her just deserts for ever getting married.

You can often tell how much care and trouble a woman has by the way she does her hair. She stops wearing it in a loose, fluffy mass on the top of her head if she has to work and worry, and twists it in a little hard knot that greatly resembles a door knob.—Atchison (Kan.) Globe.

Johnny—My pop is richer'n you pop.
Freddy—Maybe he is, but he'll never get back the money he lent my pop.

A Diet of Wild Honey.
Wild honey as a change is an agreeable sweetmeat, but after a few days constantly partaking of it the European palate rejects it as nauseous and almost disgusting. Our experience extended over a fortnight, during which period our food consisted solely of it and maize. It has escaped the Biblical commentators that one of the principal hardships that John the Baptist must have undergone was his diet of wild honey.—National Geographic Magazine.

HON. W. J. WILLIAMS,

Candidate for Republican nomination for Congress at the primary election Tuesday, May 17. Your support is earnestly solicited.

TO THE VOTERS.

Believing that the voters should know for whom they cast their ballot and the qualifications of the candidate, I submit this for your consideration:

I was born and have always lived in the eastern part of the city, and now reside in Himrod avenue. Am a son of Charles Hogg, now deceased.

I. M. HOGG.

formerly in charge of the mechanical department of the Brown-Bonell plant. Was educated in the local public schools, graduating from Oak and also Rayen high schools. Prepared myself for a professorship in economics, receiving my degree from Adelbert college of Western Reserve University. Could not afford to devote minute to teaching, however, and followed life insurance as a means of livelihood.

For the past five years I have been deputy to the county auditor.

Believing that my apprenticeship has acquainted me with every detail of the office and that I am qualified to fill the office of county auditor, I ask you, after you have made investigation as to my character and qualifications to give me consideration before you vote at the primaries on May 17th. Yours truly,

I. M. HOGG.

Have You Been Counted?

If not, or if you have any doubt, fill out this coupon and mail to John P. Jones, Supervisor of Census, Seventeenth District of Ohio, Canton.

On April 15, 1910, I was living at address given below, but to the best of my knowledge I have not been enumerated there or anywhere else.

Rugs and Carpets from the Famous Smith Auction Will be on Sale This Week.

We doubt if there is a man or woman who has not heard of or read about, in magazines and newspapers, the Famous Semi-Annual Auction Sale of Rugs and Carpets of Alex Smith & Sons of New York City.

Twice a year this large and progressive firm completely clear their factories and warehouses in this manner. The last of these mammoth Auction Sales took place last week, when $3,000,000 worth of highest grade rugs and carpets were sold at less than cost of raw material.

We were represented in this sale by our New York Buyers (the J. E. Manix Co.) who was one of the largest purchasers at this sale.

Our share of these goods are here—and we might say that never has there been brought to this store a more magnificent or finer assortment of rugs than the ones included in this purchase. And the lowness of the prices—they even surprise us.

The saving we secured, will be shared at this sale by our customers. Any prospective rug buyer should at least see these wonderful values—the rest we will leave to their economic conscience—not to buy, will be impossible.

SUCCESSFUL BUTTER MAKING

Depends Upon Well Fed Cows. Perfect Cleanliness and Vigilance.

One must have good cows, as some cows will not make good butter no difference how cared for. They must have good feed and feed that will not taste in the butter as some cows will always tell in the milk what they have been eating. Cleanliness in making is very essential. Keep milk cool. If the cream separator is not used, if cool enough you will never have to skim sour milk, and therein lies one of the most essential elements of good butter. Never skim over 36 hours old if there's a little skim of cream come after, it is good for a pigs. Keep your cream jar from souring until full and if not enough cows to fill in three or four days skim deeper and then bring near the fire and sour immediately. Stir frequently while gathering cream. Some cows will make white butter all the year round, but at the same time it is good butter and for that reason use a very small amount of coloring matter, say three drops in a two gallon jar. If your cream is good it will take from 15 to 30 minutes to churn. Draw off the butter milk with butter in churn, into bowl and salt. Use a medium cup of salt to five pounds of butter. Work evenly into butter and set in a medium warm room. After it has stood two or three hours work all water and surplus salt out, mold and it is ready for the market. Do not let it get cold and set after salting, for that will spoil the grain, as you can not work satisfactory.

You have now a butter that will keep sweet for weeks. But if put with strong butter it will soon absorb the odor. Rancid butter is made from overripe cream and may taste when taken from the churn all right, but in a few hours it's the same old sour cream—Ind Farmer.
